Because they live in a northern country, Latvians look upon the sun and the heat it gives as kind and nurturing, almost like a mother, and likewise, the sun is a symbol of fertility and life. No wonder Latvians have so many songs about the sun! Naturally, sun ornaments (in the form of a simple circle or ornate variations of it, such as a pie-like figure with eight equal sections) often appear on Baltic jewelry, mittens, clothing, etc. A round brooch, for example, is in fact a sun symbol. Some believe that wearing a sun symbol offers protection, builds self-confidence, transforms the bad into good, and helps one find the right path in life. Traditional Latvian seasonal festivals are also based on the solar calendar.

The Tale of Namejs

Namejs was the leader of the Baltic Semigallian tribe and one of the last warriors standing against the German crusader invasion into the territory of what is now Latvia at the beginning of the 13th century. Outnumbered by enemy troops, Namejs was forced to retreat, but before leaving, he gave his ring to his young son as an identification token for when he returns. Hearing about the ring, the crusaders began searching for Namejs' family, hoping to force his surrender. In order to save their leader and his family, many copies of the ring were made, and most Latvian boys and men began wearing the "Namejs Ring".

The Baltic people hold herbal teas and medicines in high regard and use them regularly. For example, it is common knowledge that chamomile tea is good for a cold, Iceland moss helps a dry cough, and sea buckthorn is full of vitamins and antioxidants. Even amber is said to have medicinal properties and serve as a biostimulator. Archival folklore records contain thousands of entries with information specifically about medicinal plant usage. Look for valuable, invigorating ingredients in our teas, snacks and soaps.

BREAD AND GRAINS

Traditional breads are a delicious staple of Baltic cuisine. We offer classic rye bread as well as varieties baked with carrots or fruits and nuts. For a twist, try our rye crackers in different flavors, made from the very same bread.

Why rye bread?

- Rye grain contains many substances necessary for the human body, and each part of the grain has its specific benefits.
- The inner layer of the grain is a source of energy – carbohydrates and protein.
- The shell (bran) contains fiber and minerals, the germ contains proteins, oils and vitamins B and E.
- There are many reasons to switch to rye, or add it to your diet.

- 2 SUGARCOATED CRANBERRIES / 5.3 oz, LV #8198, $7
- 3 RYE BREADCRUMBS (RĪVMAIZE) / 14.1 oz, LV #8410, $6

Great for savory appetizers or enticing desserts!

Chickpea crisps, with a hint of sun-dried tomatoes, are a great alternative to bread or traditional crackers. They are packed with protein and fiber, and are 100% natural.
